

Application Management System Training

Understanding the Navigation Panel and Overview Page

The Application Overview page provides a summary of information about the application, as well as company details from the uploaded spatial data and information input directly into the system.

PREREQUISITE: Users must have created an application and successfully uploaded spatial data (dependent on the application type).

The Application Overview page

Within an application, the left hand side panel is referred to as the Navigation Panel and helps users navigate to the main components of the application. By clicking on Application Information in the left hand navigation panel, Application Information with respect to spatial, administrative, land, forestry, stewardship, agriculture, archaeology, consultation & notification, agriculture, archaeology, First Nations, maps and plans, and attachments can be accessed and entered by selecting the applicable tab located in the horizontal menu.

Technical information on the activities chosen for the application, can be accessed and entered by selecting the applicable activity under the Activity Information column in the left hand navigation panel.

If the application has already been validated, the status of any areas of the application that require attention can be accessed via the Overview dropdown in the top right.
